To whom it may concern,

I noticed that recently you were considering adding Aloe Vera to Prop 65 as a known carcinogen. I think that you might want to take a closer look at this before you make any rash decisions. The IARC is incorrect in its assessment and the studies that they conducted are flawed. Acting on this research alone would be high irresponsible and have major percussions to the population of consumers in California (which are very high). I suggest you take the time to look over the overwhelming studies for the last 40 years on the beneficial properties that Aloe Vera has to offer people and their health. In fact, the evidence in these studies outweigh this current study and even suggest that Aloe Vera may be beneficial in preventing cancer.

One major flaw in this study is the amount that these animals were consuming. This is unrealistic and not comparable to the amounts an average person would likely be taking. This is flawed and irresponsible. In fact, EVERY almost every food in our diets would likely yield the same result if given to a person in such unnatural and unrealistic amounts. Common sense and intended usage must be taken into account instead of manufactured unreproducible circumstances and results. I suggest you take the time to review ALL of the research and I'm sure if done, you will come to the conclusion that Aloe Vera provides nothing but superior health benefits for the consumer.

Thank you,

A educated Professional/Consumer
